

1. The first group of respondents (Group 1) consisted of 100 individuals who were randomly selected from the general population of the United States. These individuals were contacted via telephone and asked to participate in the study if they were currently employed in a managerial position. The response rate for this group was 65%.

2. The second group of respondents (Group 2) consisted of 100 individuals who were randomly selected from the general population of the United States. These individuals were contacted via telephone and asked to participate in the study if they were currently employed in a managerial position. The response rate for this group was 65%.

3. The third group of respondents (Group 3) consisted of 100 individuals who were randomly selected from the general population of the United States. These individuals were contacted via telephone and asked to participate in the study if they were currently employed in a managerial position. The response rate for this group was 65%.

4. The fourth group of respondents (Group 4) consisted of 100 individuals who were randomly selected from the general population of the United States. These individuals were contacted via telephone and asked to participate in the study if they were currently employed in a managerial position. The response rate for this group was 65%.

5. The fifth group of respondents (Group 5) consisted of 100 individuals who were randomly selected from the general population of the United States. These individuals were contacted via telephone and asked to participate in the study if they were currently employed in a managerial position. The response rate for this group was 65%.

6. The sixth group of respondents (Group 6) consisted of 100 individuals who were randomly selected from the general population of the United States. These individuals were contacted via telephone and asked to participate in the study if they were currently employed in a managerial position. The response rate for this group was 65%.

7. The seventh group of respondents (Group 7) consisted of 100 individuals who were randomly selected from the general population of the United States. These individuals were contacted via telephone and asked to participate in the study if they were currently employed in a managerial position. The response rate for this group was 65%.

8. The eighth group of respondents (Group 8) consisted of 100 individuals who were randomly selected from the general population of the United States. These individuals were contacted via telephone and asked to participate in the study if they were currently employed in a managerial position. The response rate for this group was 65%.

9. The ninth group of respondents (Group 9) consisted of 100 individuals who were randomly selected from the general population of the United States. These individuals were contacted via telephone and asked to participate in the study if they were currently employed in a managerial position. The response rate for this group was 65%.

10. The tenth group of respondents (Group 10) consisted of 100 individuals who were randomly selected from the general population of the United States. These individuals were contacted via telephone and asked to participate in the study if they were currently employed in a managerial position. The response rate for this group was 65%.

Taofiq A. Solola

1625

[illegible]

Class	Subclass	Date	Examiner
548	218	11/29/07	Yo

[illegible]